THE DIALOGUE
Leadership for the Americas

MIGRATION, REMITTANCES, & DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Overview

The Migration, Remittances & Development Program at the Inter-American Dialogue leverages migration and remittances for development through research, policy analysis, technical assistance, product development and project implementation. The Program focuses on policies that govern the flow of remittances, private sector financial and remittance services, financial access for migrants and remittance recipient families, causes of migration, and diaspora engagement. The Program has raised awareness and forged partnerships among public and private institutions in over 80 countries around the world.

Remittance Industry Observatory

The Remittance Industry Observatory (RIO) is a project of the Inter-American Dialogue that seeks to improve knowledge and information about the remittance market.

As the competitive nature of the remittance industry moves forward, the U.S. economy shows signs of improvement, Latin American and Caribbean migration patterns shift, and various countries in the Americas review their legislation on migration, it is increasingly important for industry leaders to stay informed of the trends that will affect their businesses.

RIO membership offers a wide range of opportunities tailored to the interests of the money transfer industry and those interested in it. Specifically, membership provides access to monthly industry analyses, bimonthly industry data releases, and events for in-depth analysis of current issues and interaction with experts, policy makers and other relevant figures. RIO content is tailored to topics suggested by our members, as well as to relevant migration and development issues affecting Latin America and the world.

RIO members are also offered opportunities to engage in other initiatives with the Inter-American Dialogue and its Migration, Remittances, and Development Program.
